FARMERS' COLUMN

The Farm And Home

Before a commercial feed can be sold or offered for sale lawfully in Kentucky it must be registered with the feed control department of the agricultural experiment station, and each county agent or write to the college of agriculture for information.

Bleeding and cooling are important parts of dressing a chicken. Hanging it by its feet improves bleeding. Plunge it in water of 125 to 128 degrees, pick off the feathers and dry and cool the carcass. A chicken should have plenty of water but no feed for 12 hours before killing.

By waiting until after heavy freezing, before pruning grape vines, the immature wood is killed and withered and can be easily identified and removed. Pruning can be done any time in winter, but the wood should not be frozen when cut.

Pork sausage should be three-fourths lean and one-fourth fat meat. Season at the rate of 3 level tablespoons of salt, 2 level tablespoons of black pepper and 1 level tablespoon of sage to each 6 pounds of ground meat.

Good "depression" dentifrices are being used in many homes. Baking soda alone or salt alone may be used, or a solution made of two parts of soda to one part each of borax and salt mixed together. These dentifrices are effective for daily use, but not to correct in other disorders.

Will Be Issued Cards

Tobacco growers who signed adjustment contracts will be issued allotment cards representing their initial production allotment, says a statement from the compliance office of adjustment programs at the agricultural experiment station at Lexington.

One of these cards must accompany each sales lot of the producer's tobacco. It will be attached to the sales ticket going to the warehouse office, where a special representative of the tobacco section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration will write a tax-payment warrant covering the tobacco represented on the warehouse ticket. He will make a notation on the allotment card showing the pounds covered by the warrant and the value of the tobacco.

A duplicate of the tax-payment warrant will be mailed to the county agent in the county where the allotment card was issued. Duplicate tax-payment warrants will return to the county office in a somewhat similar manner as cancelled checks return to the bank against which they were issued.

The data on the cancelled warrants will be recorded on a "master" marketing card which, after the close of the marketing season, will be checked and certified to by the committee and forwarded to Washington. This marketing card will be the basis of the second adjustment payment.

Governor To Speak

Governor Ruby Laffoon is to be one of the principal speakers at the 77th annual winter meeting of the Kentucky State Horticultural society, to be held in cooperation with the college of agriculture, university of Kentucky, at Lexington, Dec. 3-7.

A large number of subjects of interest to Kentucky orchard owners will be discussed. Speakers include R. A. Nute, Bullitt county; Frank Street, Henderson county; Louis H. Hume, Lexington; Richard Stites, of Ben R. Niles of the society; P. T. Dutton, Milford Center, Ohio; P. T. Baton, Baton Rouge, La.; V. J. Hay, Athens, Ga.; and A. J. Chiles, D. Valente, V. H. Eddy, and W. W. Magill of the college of agriculture and experiment station.

All farmers and other persons interested in fruit growing have been invited to attend the meetings.

Changes in Program

The corn-hog adjustment program of the AAA for next year calls for a reduction on the part of the contract signers of not more than 30 percent of the average corn acreage and number of hogs produced in 1932 and 1933 according to the college of agriculture, university of Kentucky.

Payments next year will be $45 per head for the number of hogs reduced and 35 cents a bushel for the estimated yield of corn on the land removed from production. Payments this year were $5 a head on the 1934 allotment, signers being permitted to produce 75 percent of their base period production; and 30 cents a bushel on the estimated amount of corn that might have been produced on the land not used.

While corn production this year was reduced 24 to 30 percent from the base period, the limits will be 10 to 20 percent next year.

Unrestricted use will be permitted of land removed from corn production next year.

Only certified contract signers will be eligible for the contemplated corn loan program next fall.

Growers who did not sign contracts this year will be eligible to sign next year.

CRIME COMES HIGH

We have reached a place in our national life when public opinion is crystallizing against crime. Laws against crime do not stamp out crime.

You cannot legislate against a man's ideals, motives and actions, especially when they are under duress, strain or stress. Law can never be a substitute for good blood, good training, and the ideals of honorable citizenship. Law is only an adjunct to these things. We are spending annually four times more for crime than it costs to operate our national government, even at the present high peak of expenditures. Our annual crime bill is five times what we spend for schools, colleges, and universities. Some citizens become alarmed at the high cost of maintaining the national government, while a fewer number criticize the amount we spend on education. Few of these same citizens, however, raise a voice of protest against organized crime that exceeds the cost of maintaining the national government.

We have seen the banks of the nation and of the world close their doors and cease business. They represented the best that the fineness and the finance of men knew.

We see the religious institutions whose duty it is to lead the people to a higher and a spiritual life decay, become silent with none to patronize their pews. Their buildings are rotten or torn down; they have failed to lead their flocks.

We see the courts and law enforcement agencies throw up their hands and frankly admit they were beaten by criminals; a whole nation closing one criminal for weeks and spending millions of dollars before it could stop the criminal acts of one desperado.

In all the turmoil and fineness of all the civil and political institutions man has created, only the public school system has stood the shock. Her teachers and administrators have kept the faith, often times for months and even years without pay, and scarcely a scintilla when a great commonwealth like Kentucky failed and repudiated an equalization fund for their salary after the term had been taught.

With all these proofs of the foresight and wisdom of our educational system, does it not appear that people should have faith in the judgment and plans of educators to make the schools better and instead of opposing such plans lend their support and influence, overlook minor imperfections, and help to build up the only institution that has kept faith.

SCHOOL CONSOLIDATION

both a high school and an elementary school, and buses so pupils could be carried to each.

Another consolidated school could be established on the highway at Wrigley, and buses so run that the elementary pupils could be carried from nearby districts. Perhaps there would be a sufficient number here to maintain a high school, especially if something were done to connect Oak Hill and Blair Mills with Wrigley so their eighth grade graduates could come to high school at Wrigley. The Blair Mills country is one of the best communities in Morgan county, and they have never had a good road out so as to get to West Liberty. I drove a car out of there this summer and crossed Devil's fork. I think I never came as near getting killed in my life, and I would not take the risk again for a thousand dollars. Wade Blair was in the car with me and he did not speak for 30 minutes after we got over the cliffs.

The districts along the highway from West Liberty to the Magallow county line could perhaps have an elementary consolidated school about White Oak and have the same bus which carries the grade children bring high school students to West Liberty.

The problem of consolidation in the Elkfork and Palat sections is out of the question until they have a road thru their part of the county. Almost one third of Morgan county is area and population is isolated because of no graded road. Here live many of the best citizens and biggest taxpayers. In an area larger than many whole counties in Kentucky, yet they have received very little in the way of improvements in roads. They have a high school at Crockett to which the people are loath and which they regard with much pride and interest. For my part I would like to support for public office either state or county persons who would take a vital, active interest to see that this section of Morgan county receives the next road building program.

The problem before the school authority is what form of education will secure for the small rural district the best educational opportunity and the closest and most effective service with the funds which they have to spend. The taxes people pay for education are considered an investment and not a loss when wisely used. Here is one channel thru which the unused increment of wealth flows back to the tapper who has helped to produce that wealth.

The hunching of far reaching plans depends upon one fundamental step—education the education of adults, the education of young people. The spirit of the new school is one of active work. History has never gone simply forward. There have always been interludes and regressions, but when the mist have cleared away new and forward steps have been taken. The bold idealism of today may be more common sense of tomorrow.

We know that there is betterm in every human concern. Nothing is needed but collective effort.

The road upward from ignorance, want, narrowed lives, and selfish ideas is a long and steep one. The top to which it leads will not be reached in one or two or in half a dozen generations of men. But each year of such cooperation of schools and community as is now going forward will put heart and strength into the climber of the upward way.

We have recently seen the overthrow of great and powerful governments, the pride and boast of powerful statesmen who helped to build them. We have seen great factories capable of producing immense quantities of goods and employing thousands of men stop, stand idle, and become wasted and useless wealth. Factories which were the heart of financiers and inventors have failed to answer the problems before them.

We have seen the banks of the nation and of the world close their doors and cease business. They represented the best that the fineness and the finance of men knew.

We see the religious institutions whose duty it is to lead the people to a higher and a spiritual life decay, become silent with none to patronize their pews. Their buildings are rotten or torn down; they have failed to lead their flocks.

We see the courts and law enforcement agencies throw up their hands and frankly admit they were beaten by criminals; a whole nation closing one criminal for weeks and spending millions of dollars before it could stop the criminal acts of one desperado.

With all these proofs of the foresight and wisdom of our educational system, does it not appear that people should have faith in the judgment and plans of educators to make the schools better and instead of opposing such plans lend their support and influence, overlook minor imperfections, and help to build up the only institution that has kept faith.

DANIEL BOONE and KENTUCKY

By Dr. Charles M. Knapp

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY

Daniel Boone was born on Nov. 2, 1734, in a small log cabin about a mile and a half from Exeter meeting House, in Dec. Township in the Schuylkill Valley in Eastern Pennsylvania, some eight or ten miles from the present city of Reading. Then that country was on the frontier. In fact Philadelphia itself, not many miles away, had been settled little more than a century earlier. So it was on the frontier that Daniel Boone commenced life and surroundings which never after through his life were very only in degree.

Daniel Boone's grandparents had emigrated from England to Pennsylvania in 1717. George Boone, Daniel's grandfather, had been born in the peaceful Devonshire village of Stoke House, Square Boone and Sarah Morgan, daughter of the Quakers, John Morgan, a native of a native of a neighboring village. Both were members of a relatively new sect, the Society of Friends, or Quakers as they were commonly referred to. They had nine children, their third child and second son was Spurge Boone, the father of Daniel Boone. But George Boone was ambitious for his family, and a Quaker. Therefore he sent his three children, Spurge, Daniel, and John, to Pennsylvania some years before they were born.

1712 to investigate the country as a place in which to emigrate. After several months in Pennsylvania the oldest son, George, returned to England with such a favorable report that in August 1717 George Boone settled in Aldington about 12 miles north of that town. Soon he moved again to the settlement of North Wales, in Gwynedd township, a Welsh community, whose members a few years before had become Quakers.

Again George Boone moved his family and belongings. In 1718 he took out a warrant for two acres in Olney township, to which his daughter Sarah had moved earlier, there this time to remain during his original log cabin in 1719 at the age of 78. On July 23, 1720, at Gwynedd Meeting House, Spurge Boone and Sarah Morgan, daughter of the Quakers, John Morgan, were married. For several years they lived in the new settlement, probably on rented land. Finally, in 1721, they bought a farm of 250 acres, and then's time, they moved to a tract adapted to grazing on cowboys' needs,
not far from the present city of Reading. Here he remained for a few years, in the cabin erected with the help of the Quakers. Daniel Boone, then of them to Pennsylvania some years before they were born.

CASKEY
Rev. J. H. Caskey, pastor of F. M.
Caskey, on Protestant Street, quietly passed away in his home at 1 o'clock
Wednesday morning, Nov. 25, 1934.

She was born in West Liberty Aug.
20, 1857, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs.
Robert Phelan.

When eleven years old, Rhoda Ellen Caskey was converted and joined the Christian church under the ministry of Rev. Arnsperger. She always enjoyed attending church and Sunday school. She was a regular member of the choir until just a few years ago.

She was also a teacher in the Sunday school. At one time she had a class of sixteen boys just entering manhood.

On Christmas she presented each one of those boys a small Bible. It is interesting to follow these boys, the carried his Bible in the field as he played.

Some earned the gift in the pocket to the World War. A copy paper gave an account of how a bullet was prevented from piercing the heart of one of these boys by going half an inch from the Bible. Ann Rhoda's present him. The last time she was able to walk to church she taught the Bible class.

On Nov. 2, 1870, Rhoda's mother married to Frank Arnsperger, who was survives her. He was a West Liberty young man and they made their home there. They were born two sons. One was in the army. Their son, Leslie, resided in West Liberty.
One niece, Mrs. M. H. Case of Middletown, Ohio, also survives.

Mrs. Caskey was loved by all who knew her. When in her prime she was recognized as one of the best two dressmakers in town, and made a nice bank account with her needle.

Two years ago "Ann Rhoda" fell and hurt her hip. Since then she was unable to leave her bed, but was a patient, cheerful sufferer. She loved flowers and loved company. She was always appreciative of every attention from her host of friends.

Funeral services will be held at the house this morning at 10 o'clock by Rev. Harlen Murphy and Rev. J. J.
Sessler. Interment will be in the Salver cemetery.

BAPTIST CHURCH
Prayer meeting and song service at 7 o'clock every Thursday night.
Sunday school at 10 o'clock a.m.

Iceland's Contrasts and Contradictions Marked

In many ways Iceland is an island of contrast and contradictions. It is bathed on the south and west coasts by the warm Gulf stream and on the north coast by the cold Arctic current. The climate is relatively mild, notes a correspondent in the Chicago Tribune, but shows great variation between localities, depending partly on elevation and partly on the nearness of the Gulf stream.

Three-fourths of the island is uninhabitable and only one-fourteenth of it consists of lowland, where most of the inhabitants live. Thirteen per cent of it is covered by glaciers. It has 107 volcanoes with thousands of craters, and about 11 per cent of its area is covered with lava beds which were formed by streams which issued forth from the depths since the great ice age.

At times parts of the island are subjected to clouds of poisonous dust and drift sand. The winds are violent. The streams are many and turbulent and inclined to change their beds. The island has a good supply of hot springs and geysers.

Iceland must support its timber and coal, iron and metal ware, cereals, coffee, sugar and tobacco, but signs are present in unmistakable number that there were extensive forests on the island in its early history. These, however, have not given rise to coal beds, but only to deposits of lignite. Beneath its lava beds the rocks bear signs of glacial scratching.

Butterflies' Scales Are Outlet for Scent Glands

In addition to the ordinary scales, the scales of many butterflies possess special additional scales, smaller than the others, which have been called phanerochaetae, phanerochaetae or condrosoma. Sometimes they are scattered among and hidden under the ordinary scales, but they are frequently placed in masses, on a particular part of the wing, and covered by large overlapping scales. They are generally colorless, but sometimes black or brown. Not infrequently they are concealed in a pocket, or fold, of the wing. They are generally larger and softer than the ordinary scales, and evidently serve as outlets for scent glands in the tissue of the wings. The scales are considered to be modified hairs, and consist of double-walled closed sacs which afterward flatten out, and are striated. The color of the wings of the insect is partly due to pigment contained in these sacs, and partly, especially in the case of shot or iridescent tints, to the refraction of light from the striated scales of the wings.

Old Universities
The University of Santo Tomas at Manila, Philippine Islands, is the oldest institution of learning in territory under the jurisdiction of the American flag. It was established in 1611 by Dominican missionaries, and has been operated continuously under Catholic auspices. Harvard university, founded in 1636, has been operated continuously longer than any other institution of learning in the continental United States. The college of William and Mary, founded at Williamsburg, Va., in 1693, is regarded as the second oldest and the third on soil under the jurisdiction of the United States, although college activities at William and Mary were suspended for several years during the Revolutionary and Civil wars. Yale university, established in 1702, comes next.

Man Benefited by Insects
All insects are not destructive. A great number of them are beneficial by aiding man against the kinds that destroy. Among these are the ladybird beetles, whose larvae feed on plant lice the golden-eyed lace wing fly, and the syrphid flies, whose larvae also feed on plant lice. The larvae of the tachinid flies (which look much like evergreen house flies) help to control many serious moth pests. Ichneumon wasps, so tiny as never to be noticed with the naked eye, or so strong that they can force their eggs into almost three inches of maple wood, help to control various borers.—Detroit Free Press.

Valuable Woods
Certain kinds of mahogany are much sought after. The finest mahogany forests in the world belong to Oba, king of Benin, in west Africa. Occasionally a single tree with an exceptionally fine mottle is found. This may fetch as much as $2,000 in the open market in Liverpool. But there may be only one specimen of its kind in 10,000 trees. Teak and sandal wood always fetch good prices; teak on account of its durability and immunity from white ants, and sandal wood because of its natural fascinating aroma.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Shell-Fish That Spins Silk
The plana, a genus of shell fish in the Mediterranean sea, is one of the few aquatic animals that spin silk. Years ago in Italy, this material was woven into cloth and used rather extensively in the manufacture of stockings. Pope Benedict XV wore a pair of them.—Collier's Weekly.

Stippling Effective
The application of paint to room walls by "sponge stippling" is a method used by interior decorators to achieve pleasing results. A rough or patched wall is decidedly improved by sponge stippling and the final effect is one of patterned richness.

Well, when will this nation get its fill of taxation, And let the dear people live free from the grater? Why in the darnation Do we vote the creation Of debts we can't pay? Neither now nor hereafter? It is out of all reason: It's the next thing to treason; It's shamefully shocking When people aspire In the midst of depression To start school progression That will float our indebtedness Higher and higher. We can talk it and vote it, But our children will tote it, And our grandsons will owe it, When we're all dead and gone, With the home schools abolished, And our freedom demolished, Won't we be in a pickle? Now come, "Slah," come on.
